

Proposals for a new Aldi food store along Portsmouth Road, Thames Ditton

Computer Generated Image of the proposed store

Aldi, the award-winning discount food retailer, is bringing forward proposals to redevelop the former Guy Salmon Dealership along Portsmouth Road, Thames Ditton with a new, high-quality, discount food store.

Aldi has long wanted to expand the offer of its amazing value and choice to the residents of Thames Ditton. The former Guy Salmon sales showroom along Portsmouth Road is an ideal location.

The scheme would deliver a new Aldi food store with a contemporary design that compliments the local architectural aesthetic. The store would be in a convenient and accessible location with pedestrian and cycle access, as well as car parking facilities.

The new store would improve customer choice, complement existing local retail and reduce journeys for those who currently have to travel to visit other discount supermarkets.

The proposed store would employ up to 50 local people, with further job opportunities supported via construction and through the supply chain. This would represent a major improvement to a redundant brownfield site.

Scheme Benefits

New Aldi food store with contemporary design complimenting the local character and improving the heritage setting

Convenient and accessible location, reducing travel time compared to other existing supermarkets

Strong pedestrian and cycle links to encourage alternative travel, including 18 cycle spaces

New car parking facilities, including 51 parking spaces

Increased choice for local residents that complements existing local retail

Creation of up to 50 new jobs for local people

Economic boost to the area, including through construction and wider supply chain

Maximising use of a redundant brownfield site in a prominent location adjoining a conservation area

We look forward to receiving your thoughts on our proposals.
